

Privacy Policy

Personal Information

Fire-Alert protects your personal information. Our personal information protection policy is applicable to your use of our website and to our daily operations.

Our use of you personal information

Fire-Alert does not obtain your email address automatically when you use our website. However, Fire-Alert may obtain your personal information voluntarily when you communicate such information to us, such as your name, address and other pertinent details. This information can be used in order to send you information, updates as well as invitations to Fire-Alert events that we believe might interest you. We can also use such information to improve our communication with you, or generally, to improve the content of our website. By providing us such information, you agree that they can be used in the manner and for the purposes we have described.

Unless we are legally obligated to do so, Fire-Alert will not disclose your personal information to any third parties.

Email

Fire-Alert also collects personal information when you send us email messages. Such personal information is only used for the specific purposes for which you have sent them to us.

Cookies

Cookies are little files of information that are sent to your browser and recorded on your computer's hard drive when you visit certain websites. These cookies help identify which areas of a site you have visited. Please note that Fire-Alert does not currently use cookies on our website.

Access to your information

Upon request, Fire-Alert will provide you access to all personal information we have collected about you from our website. To access such information or if you believe that such information may not be up-to-date, please send us a message at yvan@fire-alert.ca. At any time, you can also ask that your information be removed from our mailing list or our databank by sending us a message at yvan@fire-alert.ca.

Fire-Alert reserves the right to amend this policy from time to time.